

GENDER

Transgender wrestler wins state championship

I think once you bring a drug induced element into sports, we have a big problem. Testosterone is classified a controlled substance under the Anabolic Steroids Control Act of 1990 and its considered illegal without a doctor's prescription. All sports should be held to the same standard, professional, school, or amateur. If she wants to be a guy, that's her business, but when it starts to dictate the outcome of sporting events or gives an athlete an unfair advantage over others, it must not be permitted in my opinion.

Otherwise, before we know it, we'll end up having more girls wanting to be guys so they can get testosterone and win in female sport competitions. This could be a very dangerous precedent. All decisions regarding gender change/identification has up and down sides that must be considered and weighed. Just like driving a car, you have to be 18 before you can drive a car by yourself. I feel that kids shouldn't be allowed to make gender decision for themselves until they turn 18, unless there are extreme extenuating circumstances that threaten their physical health or psychological well-being.

Again, in my opinion, parents must step up and be parents and not allow kids to run the family and make these types of decisions because they're not mature enough to fully understand the potential challenges/ramification that may develop as a result. In addition to being prohibited from driving a car until your 18, you can't buy a gun, go into the military, buy alcohol, buy drugs/controlled substances, buy cigarettes, etc. ... for good reasons. Now, most the accidents on the freeways are being caused by Millennials 18-34 distracted because they're texting. This means that all of us are going to end up paying higher insurance premiums because Millennials can't control their phone addictions ... ridiculous. The Millennial generation and younger kids seem to think they're entitled to special privileges when they can't even be responsible with the power they've already been legally given. It's really gotten out of control. Common sense laws are necessary and must be good for the entire society, not just a so-called chosen few who think they have special privileges and super powers beyond the rest of us. All due respect to everyone else's view, but this is how I see it.

Nevertheless, I'm always open to any alternative thoughts or solutions that address these issues effectively. Unfortunately, so-called social scientists have gone MAD, they're making a fortune doing therapy at our expense, and it's not working. It's making things worse and causing a worldwide backlash from countries who refuse to follow this ill-advised approach to gender identity that is leading back to Sodom and Gomorrah. In my opinion, it's time to get back in touch with the common sense values of our ancestors like Grandma and Grandpa ... they had it right.

For example, common sense already tells us that other citizens shouldn't have to pay for what someone else decides to do with their body, so why are we even discussing this type of silliness in the first place? This is how ludicrous discussions/national debates have become in this country and around the world.

This generation seems to be lost in the wilderness trying to find its way because they have discarded basic moral values and replaced it with dangerous experimental social scientific thinking that has no proven track record except the doom/destruction of Rome, Greece, Babylon, Sodom and Gomorra who were on the same slippery slope.
